Principal's Message

Dear Parents

Welcome to Week Five of our term. It is certainly flying by! This weekend is a long weekend, a great chance to have an extended break for the children and staff. NAPLAN takes place this term and our children in Years 3 and 5 will undertake the assessments in Week 7 and if needed Week 8. I'm sure they will do the best that they can with the assessments.

Recently the first P&F and SAC meetings of the year were held. I would like to welcome new SAC members Damian Cunnane and Jo Gibb. Jo has taken on the P&F nominee role on the SAC and Damian rejoins us after a break last year. It is wonderful to have dedicated and passionate parents happy to take up roles on two associations.

The season of Lent is well upon us and Project Compassion has been launched recently. It is the Church and thus the school's primary fundraising initiative for Term One. All classrooms have a donation box that funds can be placed into. The link below contains information about Project Compassion and where the funds are directed.

<https://www.caritas.org.au/project-compassion>

During the last week of term on Wednesday 27 March we will be having an Easter hat/bonnet parade. It is an opportunity to be creative and come up with a design that emulates the theme of rebirth that accompanies Easter. Traditional themes such as rabbits, butterflies, eggs, etc could be incorporated into the design. All children are invited to get involved if they would like.

Mums, please save the date of Friday 10 May 2024. This year we will be having a light breakfast for Mums in the morning at around 7.50am followed by a Mass. We hope you will be able to attend, and more information will be provided closer to the time.

Our Happy Families article is titled, 'Don't Worry'. It provides some information about practical ways you can assist your child when they are feeling concerned or anxious.

God Bless

Happy Families

Don't Worry!

When your child is angry, have you ever tried telling them to just "calm down?"

I bet it worked! I'm entirely confident that they smiled at you angelically and said something like, "Thank you for your wisdom! You are right; I do just need to calm down."

Just kidding!

In fact, if they're anything like my own kids, they may have yelled back, "I don't want to calm down!" before storming off to their room and slamming the door behind them.

When it comes to dealing with big emotions like anger, it never helps to tell our children to just “calm down.” Yet anger isn’t the only emotion that we try to dismiss.

How often have we accompanied our kid to their first day at kinder, to a first play date with a friend, or to a new relative’s house and said something like, “Don’t worry! You’ll do fine?”

We might believe that we’re being reassuring. After all, these words are coming from a place of kindness and compassion. Yet they are unlikely to do anything to address the worries and anxieties our kids are experiencing.

The difference between anger and worry is that worry is often a hidden emotion. We may say “don’t worry,” and unlike saying “calm down,” it might seem to work. Our child may smile back at us as they walk into kinder or the new situation. They might even seem less nervous the next time. Yet on the inside, they’re thinking something like, “My parent doesn’t understand me... I can’t talk to my parent about my worries... I don’t have anyone to help me...”

So if saying “don’t worry” doesn’t cut it, what should we be doing instead?

1. Be proactive

Often, the biggest worry kids have is the fear of the unknown. We can greatly diminish the anxiety our kids are likely to feel by talking to them about what to expect. If they’re starting at a new kinder, that could mean introducing them to their teacher in advance, showing them where the bathrooms are, and letting them know what time you will be picking them up. If they’re going to visit a relative for the first time, it can be useful to remind them about how they are related, what the house will look like, and any rules that may be different at this new location. Whenever there is a big event on the horizon, it really pays to help our kids visualise what that event will look like.

2. Provide emotional support in the moment

If it looks like your child is getting nervous, telling them not to worry only invalidates their feelings. Instead, you can say something like, “It looks like you’re feeling a bit worried about something. Would you like to talk to me about it?” Then wait. Silence is a powerful form of communication; it tells our kids that we’re listening. Make sure not to jump in and try to solve their problems when they do start talking. Just listen and provide a sounding board as they work their way to their own solutions.

3. Help them address the persistent worry

Some kids are more prone to anxiety than others. Importantly, worry and anxiety do not always look like worry and anxiety. It can often present as frequent stomach aches, trouble sleeping, or irritability. If you’re not sure what is driving your child’s behaviour, but there have been recent changes in your child’s life or a big event coming up, worry may be part of the problem. It can be useful to talk to them in age-appropriate terms about the purpose of worry – that worry is like a messenger telling us that something might go wrong, and we can use our worry to help us make good choices and stay safe. Books like The Worrysaurus by Rachel Bright and What If? by Lynn Jenkins can also serve as a springboard for discussion.

Worry is just like any other emotion. We can't stop our kids from feeling it by telling them to just calm down, relax, or get over it. Like with all emotions, the best thing we can do is to be patient and support our kids as the emotion runs its course.

Ninja Playground:

I'm sure you have all seen the temporary fencing for the new playground and the ninja warrior course has been installed. On Monday we saw the commencement of work to remove the existing tired and well used play equipment and now the construction of the new playground and obstacles for the ninja warrior course starting to be installed. We will soon see the completion of the ninja warrior course limestone wall, wood chip installation and shade sail to follow soon. I am sure all our students are just as eager as we are to see the completion of this project and start being able to play on the new equipment. The P&F committee would like to thank our school community both past and present for their loyalty in supporting our fundraising events as working together we can achieve great things for our students.

Easter Raffle:

The Easter Raffle tickets will go on sale online on Wednesday 20 March and drawn Wednesday 27 March 2024. As Mr Gibbs outlined there will be an Easter Bonnet/Hatt Parade this year. We look forward to seeing your creative bonnets, hats and or hair on Wednesday 27 March.
